ARENAX STAGE MISSION

Arena Stage is the voice of American theater resident in our nation’s capital. Focused on American artists, our productions are innovative and representative of stories from across the country. We nurture new plays and reimagine classics. We celebrate our democracy and diversity through a multitude of voices in our productions and community engagement programs to inspire people to action. We produce all that is passionate, exuberant, profound, entertaining, deep, and dangerous in the American spirit.
Putting a face on immigration changes everything. It can be hard to understand any concept in the abstract, and I suspect immigration is especially difficult if one has never had direct experience with those complications and challenges. Thank you for joining Arena for this performance of Martyna Majok’s Sanctuary City, a powerful story that gives face to the struggle.

I have seen this struggle up close and personal. Oscar M. Caballero is a determined young man from Nicaragua. I met him through his uncle when Oscar came to the United States in search of a better life. He has been persistent and focused in making that happen. Life in Nicaragua was politically dangerous for both Oscar and his family. He has the eye of an artist and was rigorous about continuing his education as an architect. My partner Suzanne and I took him in as a member of the family to help him bridge the time as he built his portfolio. His enthusiasm for design and architecture—aware of the impact of architecture on the natural environment—propelled him to Columbia University’s School of Architecture. We enlisted help from other friends and are so proud to have supported him on this journey. He has now graduated and is working for an architecture firm and looking for ways to mitigate the damage to the planet by creating buildings that exist in harmony with the environment. I look forward to the beautiful and useful buildings this young man will design in the future.

János Szász is a superbly talented Hungarian director in theater and film. I met János on an exchange visit of directors and artistic directors to Hungary and then invited him to Arena Stage to direct A Streetcar Named Desire in 2001. He has directed plays throughout Hungary, Norway, and the United States and has a big film career in Europe. Sadly the rise in antisemitism in Europe put him and his family at risk. Their home was raided, and their lives threatened. Suzanne and I and a wonderful Board member worked with János to help him and his family emigrate to the US. I am pleased that he will direct Angels in America at Arena next year. He brings a unique vision to every play. It could be his film director’s eye that enhances his ability to create a special world on stage visually, as well as drawing deep relationships from the actors. It would have been heartbreaking to lose his artistry to racism.

To say our lives have been changed because of Oscar and János and his family is an understatement—we have received as much as we have given.

My sister Bridget and friends have brought a Ukrainian family to Juneau, Alaska, and are supporting them through housing and work. Many in the Arena family are, or are directly connected to, immigrants. I have other friends who are supporting immigrants through their gifts to specific agencies helping people come to America for a better life. We are a country of immigrants and to quote Hamilton, “get the job done.”

We as a people can reach out and help one life at a time through our focus. I know many of you are supporting immigrants, too. Stories like Sanctuary City are essential to helping people see beyond the political debate and into the lives of compassionate, amazing people.

Immigrants are a vital part of America’s past, present, and future.

Perhaps it is odd to begin my note to you for this performance of Sanctuary City with that most famous line from Dear Evan Hansen. A critical part of the resiliency of not-for-profit theater is partnerships with other not-for-profit theaters as well as commercial producers. Our production of Sanctuary City is made through a partnership with Berkeley Repertory Theatre, and later this season we are pleased to partner with McCarter Theatre for Ride the Cyclone. I started my note with Dear Evan Hansen—now a month since its Broadway run ended—because as Arena’s loyal audience knows, Dear Evan Hansen started its award-winning journey in the Kreeger Theater in 2015. That was a fabulous partnership with producer Stacey Mindich and 101 Productions and top of mind when considering the resiliency of Arena Stage.

Sharing resources to support good storytelling in both the resident and commercial worlds can be a vital part of any season. Sanctuary City tells a contemporary story focused on the lives of America’s younger immigrant population, themselves searching for resiliency. Illuminating the political debate through the story of these two young people navigating their world and this country, our partnerships ensure that the story will be heard all over the country. With co-productions, we pull together our resources—financial, physical, and human. There are different benefits to each co-production partnership. Sometimes Arena benefits from being the second partner by having less to build and shorter rehearsal time. In those instances, Arena will share financially with our partner so that their upfront costs are balanced with Arena’s contribution. Other times Arena will be the first in line and our partner with then do the same.

Arena’s organization is not-for-profit, however that does not mean Arena would not like to see its productions go on to a commercial life. While the commercial producers and artists are the primary beneficiaries when a play has a successful Broadway run, Arena’s small percentage participation with Dear Evan Hansen royalties boosted our ability to commission and foster new stories. So, we all benefit from that successful partnership, and then more new plays are created.

As Dear Evan Hansen closes and Sanctuary City makes its way around the country, I am buoyed by thoughts of our creative partners. It takes a village, it’s a team effort, we are all in this together. We find resiliency by embracing partners to help us all be more than we are when alone.

Audiences are also a vital part of Arena’s resiliency. Thank you for being here today.

On the Margins of the American Dream

Five days after my 21st birthday, I married a man who was not an American citizen. I vividly remember the bewildering tangle of bureaucracy we had to try to decipher, and the crushing worry about whether we’d be believed as a real couple. This was Los Angeles in 1994. I had just started my senior year of college, and still naively bought into the melting pot mythology hook, line, and sinker. I really thought the huddled masses just had to fill out a few forms to be welcomed with open arms. Needless to say, I was in for a rude awakening.

I was lucky. I didn’t have to navigate a language barrier (unless you count government-ese, which is real), childcare, lost wages, or racial prejudice while trying to wade through the endless lines and agents and paperwork and redirections. It was still terrifying and seemingly insurmountable. Instructions were a joke—a garbled mass of gobbledygook. There was a phone number to call with questions, where you’d sit on hold for 45 minutes before the line invariably went dead. You could show up to the immigration office, stand on line all day, and never even make it inside the building. It took us three tries—we arrived the third time at 4am and stood alongside families camped out with coolers, tents, children, and pets who had clearly been there for days. The lines for the shockingly small number of clerks who spoke Spanish circled around the block. It didn’t take long to realize that the system was not set up for people to succeed. Those who did, did so despite the system, not because of it.

Playwright Martyna Majok has an uncanny ability to channel the inner lives of humans living on the margins of the American Dream. She paints striking pictures of people living between worlds: teenagers, immigrants, semi-orphans, those denied the right to marry. And that’s just in Sanctuary City alone. Her writing puts the disenfranchised front and center, and exquisitely evokes the longing to belong that many of us share; which gets exponentially magnified when circumstances deny someone their right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

In addition to her sublime character depictions, Martyna writes deeply nuanced dialogue. What appears simple on the surface begins to reveal layers of subtext. She does not spell everything out for us directly, but rather invites us to participate by filling in blanks and putting pieces together. One of my favorite examples of this is thinking about the way Martyna uses names in the play. Our two protagonists are listed in the script as “B” and “G” and they never refer to each other by name. The one character who does have a name, Henry, also happens to be the only character whose home is not built on shifting sands. Henry knows who he is and where he belongs. The layers deepen when Henry gives G the nickname “Boston,” dripping with both accusation and irony. Boston is where she wants to go to college—it is privilege, escape, fantasy, success, and yet, somehow we know it will never really belong to her.

The play employs a fascinating structure—utilizing repetition to indicate that we are jumping around chronologically. It ends up giving us a feeling of time passing and standing still all at once. A really interesting moment comes when one of the characters exasperatedly shouts “It’s 2006!” implying that our nation has been around for hundreds of years and if we haven’t figured out how to live up to our ideals by now, we never will. My brain immediately started to think: “OK, but this character clearly doesn't know what happens in the future. Things get better. The Supreme Court takes huge steps toward ensuring equality for all, so this feels a little bit dated.” And then I thought, “Hmm. Today in 2022, the Supreme Court just overturned a major decision and threw precedent out the window, so really, the ground is never as stable as we think it is.”

Which brings us to the crux of the play. The United States talks a good talk about being a refuge for all. But our power structures aren’t set up to benefit the masses, though politicians like to pretend they are. The reality is that some people get lucky, while others get brushed off the nation’s desk like sandwich crumbs. All too often, who wins and who loses depends on arbitrary circumstance rather than what is fair or just. This country was founded on a belief that everyone deserves access to opportunity; but we’ve historically had a pretty selective definition of “everyone.” Martyna’s story reminds us that even as we inch toward making our imperfect system better, we can’t turn away from the people we are leaving behind.

She led the re-invention of Arena Stage, focusing on the architecture and creation of the Mead Center for American Theater and positioning Arena Stage as a national center for American artists through its artistic programming. During her time with the company, Arena Stage has workshoped more than 100 productions, produced 39 world premieres, staged numerous second and third productions, and been an important part of nurturing nine projects that went on to have a life on Broadway. In 2014, Molly made her Broadway debut directing The Velocity of Autumn, following its critically acclaimed run at Arena Stage. She was awarded honorary doctorates from American University and Towson University. In 2018, she was honored as Person of the Year by the National Theatre Conference and inducted into the Washington DC Hall of Fame. In 2020, she was awarded the Director of Distinction in Cairo, Egypt, from the Academy of Arts. During the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020, she developed the concept for two online films, May 22, 2020 and The 51st State, overseeing the production direction as well as directing pieces within the films. She also spearheaded a variety of other new online content, including a weekly talk show Molly’s Salon, during the live performance hiatus.

EDGAR DOBIE (Executive Producer)

Born in Vernon, British Columbia, a village next to the Rocky Mountains (three years after Arena had its first performance in 1950), I am one of five brothers raised by my Dad Edgar, a mechanic and small businessman, and Mom Connie, a telephone operator and union organizer. I am the only Dobie to make a career in theater. Luckily for me, drama was an arts elective I was offered at the tender age of 12 so I hung up my hockey skates and joined the drama class, led by teacher Paddy Malcolm and her fledgling Powerhouse Community Theater after school. By the time I graduated from high school, we volunteers had built ourselves a 200-seat, fully equipped theater on its own piece of land in the center of town and found a sold-out audience for the full season of plays we had on offer. That experience taught me so many lessons about the power of theater to foster collaboration and share meaningful stories, as well as the public values that attach themselves to building a safe place where everyone is welcome. All those lessons served me well as a managing leader and producer both sides of the border and both sides of the commercial and non-profit theater divide. Arriving here in Southwest with my good wife Tracy and our daughter Greta Lee in 2009 makes me feel like I am well-equipped to do a good job for you all.

This theater operates under an agreement between the League of Resident Theatres and Actors’ Equity Association.

THANK YOU TO OUR DONORS

Thank you so much for your support of Arena Stage! Whether you add a donation to your purchase, loyally renew your membership every year, or have even included us in your estate plans, your gift allows us to continue to serve as the voice of American theater in the nation’s capital. Ticket sales only cover about half of what it costs to bring these shows to life, so we can’t do it without you.

If you are not part of our donor family but would like to support our 2022/23 Season, go to arenastage.org/donate to put your gift to work right away! Gifts starting at $100 are eligible for membership benefits like discounted tickets, newsletters, creative peeks, and more. There’s never been a better time to join us as we continue roaring back! To learn more about all our great member benefits, check out arenastage.org/member today.
