Castro loomed large in my imagination for many years, as he did for many Americans. With the help of Russia, from his tiny island over 700 miles long, he was able to bring the U.S. to its knees. There are very few stories about Castro that have been put on stage — we mostly know him through documentaries or books. Eduardo Machado, a Cuban native, is an important voice in the American theater and is one of Arena's Power Play commissioned writers. Coming here as a child, Eduardo built an impressive career in theater and television with his magical writing.

Naturally, Eduardo's understanding of Cuban history and the emotions of its people is immense. This play is also telling the story of Celia Sánchez, whose history has been hidden from the mainstream. She was nicknamed the Mother of the Revolution and was Castro's closest confidant. At the top of the play, we are thrust into the Mariel Boatlift in 1980 and the conflict happening behind closed doors in Fidel's office about how to handle the thousands wanting to flee Cuba. Eduardo activates it all for us.

Twenty years ago, my partner Suzanne and I travelled to Cuba with the Washington Ballet, and before Celia and Fidel rehearsals began, we travelled there again with Eduardo, a few staff members and several donors and Board members. We soaked up the joy and pain that is contemporary Cuba. We delved into the culture of the Island. We saw a children's theater troupe called La Colmenita — “the little beehive” — and its energy and enthusiasm was profound. We saw a film school and an art school, heard magnificent jazz and ate in private restaurants called paladares.

We went to the Nacional and the Ambos Mundos — both places mentioned in this play. We walked the streets and corridors that Fidel, Celia and our fictional characters Manolo and Consuelo walked. I was saddened to see the effects of the embargo — the people are now running out of cooking gas. How can they eat? And yet, Cuba is a country that loves its arts — music, dance, theater. The artwork in the hotels was original and beautiful, in contrast to the mass-manufactured art in some American hotels. The trip was profound.

The play is deeply political and grapples with challenging questions: What happens when a Revolution runs out of steam? What happens when the people want more? This is a socialist country with very little capitalism in the mix. This is very much a play about today: the whole question of embargos and who really gets hurt, the need for immigration policies that work and the fierce arguments around socialism that are swirling around the Democratic Party. These fascinating ideas are contained in Celia and Fidel from a different perspective. We are seeing America from a Cuban point of view.

We have had a wild and wonderful ride while putting together this explosive play.

In a New York Times review, Ben Brantley noted that Eduardo Machado’s work “delves, with equal parts wistfulness and anger, into the knotty confusions of the political relations between Cuba and the United States; Communism and capitalism as bedfellows in Cuban ideology; and the tortured ties between those who fled that island country and those who stayed behind.” For the last 70 years, Cuba has been looming in the American consciousness and it is easy to see why Eduardo is an essential voice in the American theater. What he has managed to unearth in Celia and Fidel is a testament to his skill and we are honored to have commissioned him as one of our Power Play writers.

Eduardo comes to Arena not only as one of our nation’s leading playwrights, but as a leader, full of ideas, stories and insight. He has worked across the country in some of our leading resident theaters and has found time to test the boundaries of his artistry in film, television and literature. He was the head of playwriting at Columbia University, and in 2004 he succeeded founder Max Ferrá as the artistic director of INTAR — one of the nation’s longest-running companies dedicated to Latinx artists. You can see glimpses of his career as an educator and as a producer in his manner. He’s soft-spoken, intuitive and has a story for every occasion. He leans into the feedback and embraces the journey that is new play development with wit and grace.

Throughout the process of finessing the play, Eduardo has been an ambassador for his piece. He has willingly leapt into participating in donor events, marketing videos and anything to engage with the community. His experience as an artistic leader is evident in how he ebbs and flows through conversations with patrons and the press. In the fall, he and I attended a dinner at Castas Rum Bar with our friends from GALA Hispanic Theatre and before rehearsals began, Molly and Eduardo led a trip to Cuba with members from our Board, staff and patron community. His participation in all facets of Arena’s ecosystem has enriched both the artistic process and the culture of our workplace.

I have an abundance of admiration for artists like Eduardo who take a moment to step away from their process to engage with our community. Arena is at the crossroads of the American theater, with artists and companies coming and going on a weekly basis. When they have a moment to speak with a group of students, participate in a talkback or lead a donor experience, it only furthers the idea that theater can — and should — elevate one’s community.

PLAYWRIGHT INTERVIEW
by production dramaturg Soyica Colbert

SOYICA COLBERT: When you were commissioned to write a Power Play, did you intend to write about Celia Sánchez and Fidel Castro?

EDUARDO MACHADO: It was about Fidel and then I decided to make it about Celia and Fidel. Molly offered me 1950 or 1980, and I was not interested in writing a play about remembering a young Fidel Castro, and I knew what had happened with Carter and that’s why we decided upon 1980. I knew Celia was the key figure and I wanted it to take place in 1980. Originally, I had a play with Nixon, you name it, everybody was in it, and then I... it didn’t work, and then I stopped. No, it has to be only four characters, real time, in the moment. That refined the characters.

SC: As a Power Play, what does this play teach us about America and about the Americas?

EM: It teaches us about what American imperialism, which has been going on since Teddy Roosevelt, can do, especially to South America, and then the rest of the world. The U.S. has wanted Cuba to be a state since the Spanish-American War, and they control Cuba until today. The people with power that are not seen in the play are the Americans. So the play is really about the power of the United States of America over the entire world.

SC: Recently, you and Molly traveled to Cuba. When you came back, you made some changes to the play. How did returning to Cuba inform your thinking about the play?

EM: I haven’t been there since 2016. Recently, I’ve been writing a lot about Cuba for TV, but returning made me see how the United States still oppresses Cuba because of the embargo and it became very clear to me that the struggle is still the same, so it made me more passionate about it.

SC: Why in this moment write a play about Fidel and how has your long engagement with the history and culture of Cuba prepared you to write it?

EM: Well, he was always the offstage character in many of them, and so I’ve always been aware of his presence and power in my plays about Cuba from the 50s on. When you think of a play you ask, what makes this day different than any other day? What makes my life different in what I do today? It’s Fidel. That’s a very big thing. My life would be different. That’s what makes my dramatic action moving forward... it’s him, you know?

ARENA STAGE LEADERSHIP

EDGAR DOBIE (Executive Producer) Born in Vernon, British Columbia, a village next to the Rocky Mountains (three years after Arena had its first performance in 1950), I am one of five brothers raised by my Dad Edgar, a mechanic and small businessman, and Mom Connie, a telephone operator and union organizer. I am the only Dobie to make a career in theater. Luckily for me, drama was an arts elective I was offered at the tender age of 12 so I hung up my hockey skates and joined the drama class, led by teacher Paddy Malcolm and her fledgling Powerhouse Community Theater after school. By the time I graduated from high school, we volunteers had built ourselves a 200-seat, fully equipped theater on its own piece of land in the center of town and found a sold-out audience for the full season of plays we had on offer. That experience taught me so many lessons about the power of theater to foster collaboration and share meaningful stories, as well as the public values that attach themselves to building a safe place where everyone is welcome. All those lessons served me well as a managing leader and producer both sides of the border and both sides of the commercial and non-profit theater divide. Arriving here in Southwest with my good wife Tracy and our daughter Greta Lee in 2009 makes me feel like I am well-equipped to do a good job for you all.

This theater operates under an agreement between the League of Resident Theatres and Actors’ Equity Association.
